Prometheus Energy Opens Houston Office

Houston, Texas – February 22, 2011 – Prometheus Energy Group, Inc., an energy company specializing in liquid natural gas fuel solutions, is pleased to announce that it has opened an office in Houston’s Energy Corridor on North Eldridge Parkway. The Company, established in 2003, holds its corporate headquarters in Redmond, Washington, outside of Seattle.

“We are very pleased to expand the company to Houston,” said Ron Bertasi, Chief Executive Officer. “Opening the Houston office is an indication of our confidence in the future and the company’s exciting growth prospects.”

David Saindon, the company’s Chief Financial Officer, and Max Simnitt, its Manager of Projects, will both be based out of the new Houston office. “There’s no better way to build our business than to expand to Houston,” states David Saindon. “Our office here will enable us to work closely with suppliers and customers, and access a large pool of talented potential employees.”

About Prometheus Energy

Prometheus Energy provides turnkey small-scale liquefied natural gas (LNG) solutions for energy consumers and energy producers. Prometheus helps energy consumers reduce fuel costs and environmental footprint by moving from high cost crude oil-based fuels to low cost, secure, domestic LNG. Prometheus helps energy producers to optimize E&P activities and establish new revenue streams by reducing waste and monetizing stranded gas resources. The company is vertically integrated across the value chain from LNG production through logistics, distribution, regasification and downstream marketing.
